	5	NOTE: The wife of the first son, Hugh, by the name of Elizabeth, has apparently been confused with the wife of their son Hugh who was Elizabeth de Brian (de Bryan), thus the surname of Hugh's wife is not known, only her given name Elizabeth.
	6	The order of birth of the sons with respect to each other, and the daughters with respect to each other is in harmony with the Visitations of Cornwall and Devon; however, the relationship of the order of birth between the sons and daughters is partially arbitrary, except that the record claims William (Archbishop) was born abt. 1342, that Hugh was born on date as given, and inasmuch as Margaret was married to her husband likely as early as 1331, it is presumed she must be the oldest child.
	7	It is known Powderham was given to this couple by Humphrey de Bohun, but it would appear they did not live there, and that it first became the family seat of Courtenay when it was given to (Sir) Philip Courtenay by his parents.
	8	All the sources quoted state this couple had 8 sons and 9 daughters, but in the Visitations of Cornwall and Devon the daughters are numbered from 1 to 7, no. 8 is skipped, and the last two daughters named are given numbers 9 and 10. It is not known whether this is intentional or a mistake, but inasmuch as a daughter Anne was also claimed for this family in temple work done in 1935, her name is included here.
	9	Most of the above sources state Catherine Courtenay married William, Lord Harrington, as her first husband, but there is a note in Westcote's Devonshire, p.571, stating this is an error, and that her first husband is actually William Mohun.
